a. The concept

A gender audit is a tool to assess and check the institutionalisation of gender equality into organisations, including in their policies, programmes, projects and/or provision of services, structures, proceedings and budgets [1]. It is an assessment process by which the gender equality state-of-art at an organization is analysed and the main gender biases are identified. A gender audit would pay attention to different issues such as: the status of gender equality in their policy and decision-making structures, organizational culture and processes as well as to gather staff's perceptions, understanding and behaviours towards the issue [2]. Gender audits allow organisations 'to set their own houses in order, and change aspects of the organisational culture which discriminate against women staff and women "beneficiaries"[3].
